I. Course Description

Introduction to Linguistics is a two-semester course (three hours per week): Introduction to Linguistics I & II. This course, Introduction to Linguistics II, consists of lectures, discussions, group projects, and presentations, the satisfactory accomplishment of which will enable the students to receive three credits.

Introduction to Linguistics II (one semester, three credits) is the follow-up course of Introduction to Linguistics I. The goal of this course is to familiarize students with basic understanding of the contemporary interdisciplinary applications—that is, theoretical linguistics interacting with anthropology, sociology, psychology, neurology, pedagogy, history, and the like. In general, lectures and discussions will be focused on some of the developments and advances of other disciplines in relation to modern linguistics.

Students are expected to do the assigned reading before each class. In addition, they are required to do a number of exercises of linguistic analysis to facilitate their understanding of what language is and how language affects human beings.
